

Karen Stephens has been shortlisted for the Women in Finance Awards 2022

Karen Stephens Co-Founder & CEO of BCyber has been named as a finalist in the Women in Finance Awards for Fintech Leader of the Year

The highly anticipated Women in Finance Awards 2022 shines a light on every highly skilled and talented woman propelling the finance industry forward.

Considered the pinnacle of innovation and excellence, the awards program was created to highlight the impressive achievements of top leading women in the sector, recognising them for their remarkable contribution and expertise.

The finalist list, which was announced on Friday, 7 October, features over 249 high-achieving professionals across 29 submission-based categories.

During a year of constant challenges and numerous changes, it is crucial to celebrate the leading women who are exceeding expectations and providing ongoing customer satisfaction.

Maja Garaca Djurdjevic, editor of Wealth at Momentum Media, commented: “This year we have been absolutely inundated by submissions and we’re just so excited to see so many of you take time out of your busy schedules to nominate your friends, colleagues, and peers for this coveted accolade.”

As usual, we would like to congratulate all the finalists of the sixth annual Women in Finance Awards and extend our congratulations to everyone who lodged a submission. We thank you for the support you’ve shown women in this space — support that is key for growing women’s presence in our financial services sector.

We look forward to recognising the outstanding achievements of women in the sector — achievements that have helped so many better their businesses and personal finances.”

Karen Stephens at BCyber, said that she was humbled to be recognised and proud to be named as a finalist in the Women in Finance Awards 2022. “BCyber’s recognition for our excellent contribution to SME cyber risk mitigation in the Australian Financial Services industry reinforces the strength of our service and dedication to connecting with the community and engaging with clients,” she added.
